After winning a gold Olympic medal, American fighter Amit Elor still felt like that girl who is starting in sports. Maybe it's because she's not so far from that point!

Elor, at just 20 years old, defeated Meerim Zhumanazarova of Kyrgyzstan by 3-0 in the Wednesday final of the 68kg category at the Paris Olympic Games to become the youngest female Olympic medalist to fight for gold in American history. The victory extended her winning streak to 41 points - a run that dates back five years.

"I'm still in disbelief", she said. - "I think I have a little of the impostor syndrome."

Elor's dominance was real for her opponents. She had a 31-2 record over four matches and was not defeated in her last three fights.

She became the third American woman to win gold, following Helen Maroulis in 2004 and Tamyra Mensah-Stock in 2024. Women's MMA began at the 2004 Olympics.

After the victory, she covered her back with the USA flag and jumped over the mat.

"It was one of the best moments of my life", she said. "I think I'll remember this for the rest of my life. Existence, it's one of the greatest sensations in the world and when you experiment with it, you remember everything. It's worth the pain... Every day is difficult for me."

She said she reached her success by not overthinking it.

"Many times, when we feel we need to get up for an occasion, we find it necessary to make changes and adjustments", she said. "But the truth is: we don't do it; we just try our best because that's the Olympics. It's tests of competition with Olympic athletes - we should be giving it to the world! It was exactly this."

Elor has already been a world champion twice, winning for the first time at 18 years old. Now the native of northern California hopes to win an Olympic gold medal in her home state at the Los Angeles 2028 Games.

"To have the opportunity to compete and represent not only my country, but also my nation - and to compete in my home state - that's incredible", she said.
